Long long ago, there was a boy called Sravana Kumar who dwelt in a forest with his parents. He loved and revered his parents who were old and blind. He looked after their comfort and served them with great love. Whenever they had to go anywhere, he would carefully place them in two baskets and carry them by tying the basket to the two ends of a strong pole. He would balance the pole on his shoulders and carry them that way. The parents considered themselves very lucky to have such a devoted son.

Once, Sravana Kumar carried them to a forest near Ayodhya. He built a small hut for their stay. One night, he found that there was no drinking water in the pot. As his parents were thirsty, he told them that he would go quickly and fetch water from the river. He ran to the river in the darkness with the pot in hand. He immersed the pot in the river and as the water filled into the pot there was a bubbling sound. Exactly at that time, Dasaratha, the king of Ayodhya, came to the forest for hunting.

Men and animals inhale oxygen, which the trees breathe out, carbon dioxide which men breathe out is absorbed by green leaves. Sunlight breaks it down into carbon and oxygen. Carbon makes starch and oxygen is released.

Leaves breathe out vapour, which cools the atmosphere and also brings rain. Rain helps in many ways.

Trees protect soil and prevents floods, The rotten leaves produce germs and insects which are eaten by birds. Animals go there to eat bird and men to hunt. Nobody sees the roots because they suck water and mineral salts from the ground. Birds and animals carry seeds of the fruit they eat to other places. Trees and plants depend on one another.
